BUCKY ESELHEIMER'S MODERN MAKEOVER TAKES UNEXPECTED TURN

Local barber insists bowl cuts are making a comeback.

BY THE DAILY QUEST LIFESTYLE DESK

Bucky Eselheimer, 24, decided Monday afternoon that he'd spent enough time staring at his phone and needed a change. He walked into Sal's Barber Shop asking for something modern.

"Something fresh," Bucky explained. "You know, what the kids are wearing these days."

Sal, who has operated the shop since 1978, nodded confidently and reached for his scissors.

Twenty minutes later, Bucky emerged sporting a perfectly symmetrical bowl cut.

"I wasn't really sure about it," Bucky admitted. "But Sal seemed pretty happy."

Sal defended his work, explaining that fashions come and go, and that he'd recently heard the 1990s were making a comeback.

Bucky's mother, Carol, was completely unfazed when he arrived home.

"Oh, that's nice, dear," she said. "You look just like you did in Grade 3."

Bucky spent the remainder of the afternoon searching for a hat.

TODAY'S WEATHER

FORECAST: Outdoor conditions expected to continue throughout the day.

VISIBILITY: Excellent, provided you look up.

OFFICIAL ADVICE: That sweater you've been carrying around since April may finally come in handy.

THE DAILY ASSIGNMENT

OPERATION: THE LONG WAY HOME

Harold Finch accidentally discovered an entire neighbourhood. We'd like to see what you can find on purpose.

Next time you're heading somewhere familiar, take a different route.

Walk down another street. Visit a little shop you've always passed. Wander through a nearby park.

You don't need a destination. You don't need to buy anything.

Just see what's there.

BONUS CREDIT: Discover something interesting without getting lost.

Stay on public paths, respect private property and choose a route that's safe for you.

LOCAL NEWS

HAROLD FINCH DISCOVERS NEIGHBOURHOOD HE'S LIVED BESIDE FOR 23 YEARS

Wife confirms it was there when they moved in.

BY THE DAILY QUEST LOCAL NEWS DESK

Harold Finch, 64, took what he thought was a shortcut home from the hardware store Monday and discovered an entire section of town he claims he'd never seen before.
"It has streets and everything," Finch told reporters. "There's a little bakery. Nice houses. Even a park."

Harold returned home and immediately informed his wife, Margaret, of the discovery.

"That's Maplewood," she told him.

Harold insisted she was mistaken and described the bakery in considerable detail.

"Harold, we bought our wedding cake there."

Finch remained unconvinced until Margaret showed him their wedding photographs.

He has since acknowledged that the neighbourhood may have existed for some time.

Harold is planning another walk next week, although Margaret has suggested he first learn the names of the streets they already live on.

GORDON PRICE SPENDS $12 BUYING BACK HIS OWN BELONGINGS

Weekend bargain turns out to be strangely familiar.

BY THE DAILY QUEST COMMUNITY DESK

Gordon Price returned from a neighbourhood garage sale Saturday morning with a brass lamp, a box of assorted tools and a ceramic duck.
He was particularly pleased with the duck.

"Six bucks," Gordon said, placing it proudly on the kitchen table.

His wife, Linda, looked at the duck. Then at the lamp.

"Gordon. I donated those in May."

Gordon examined the duck more closely.

A small chip behind its left wing looked familiar.

He checked the tools. His initials were scratched into one of the screwdrivers.

After a brief discussion, Gordon announced that twelve dollars was still a very reasonable price for the lot.

The duck is back on the mantelpiece.

Linda has asked him not to go to any more garage sales.
